an Mooney stated. He chided Western reporters for expecting an instant solution to Poland's problems. "I'm sick of hearing about intervention speculation," he said. "This does not help Poland." The new labor law, which should have been passed by the end of last year, is only one of a series of piecemeal problems that lie ahead. The law is supposed to enshrine the union freedoms won by strikers last summer. Mr. Rakowski's remarks are the latest indication that the authorities, alarmed at the unending run of strikes in the last few months, will want to severely restrict the right to strike. Moves in this direction have already been made with a decree stipulating that strikers only have the right to half pay, and that only if their stoppage is compatible with union statutes. Solidarity said in its policy statement Thursday night that it intended to fight to reverse that decree.

Zimbabwe Rebels in Midlands Reported to Surrender to Army

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe — Armed rebels holding Commemara army camp in the Zimbabwe midlands surrendered to government troops Friday, the local news agency reported. The Zimbabwe Inter-African News Agency quoted a highly placed source as saying: "They gave up without a shot being fired." The agency said the rebels, who had held out since Monday night, gave in as government troops prepared to launch an attack after warning the rebels that they would be bombed unless they surrendered. It retraced an earlier report that air force planes had bombed the camp. Government troops now control the camp, it said. Prime Minister Robert Mugabe said the rebels' surrender was a "great step" towards ending the conflict. He said the government would accept the rebels' terms, but they would not be allowed to return to their homes until they had been fully demobilized. The rebels had been fighting against the government since the country gained independence in 1980. They were part of the Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army, led by Joshua Nkomo.

Nonaligned Bloc Asks Afghan Troop Pullout

By Stuart Auerbach Washington Post Service NEW DELHI — The nonaligned world Friday overrode the strong objection of members friendly to the Soviet Union and called for the withdrawal of "foreign troops" from Afghanistan and "foreign forces" from Cambodia. The decision by the 92 members of the world's largest and most diverse bloc marked a sharp shift from the Havana summit meeting in 1979, when it appeared that the nonaligned movement was tilting away from neutrality toward the Soviet Union. The meeting appeared to signal the movement's rejection of the argument of Cuba, currently heading the movement, that the Soviet Union was the real ally of nonaligned nations. Instead, the members tried to exhibit evenhandedness in their references to the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union. The foreign ministers, for example, deleted a specific reference to the U.S. naval base on the Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia because there was no corresponding mention of Soviet military facilities in the region. The resolution as passed merely opposed "military presences of all the great powers" in the Indian Ocean, where both the United States and the Soviet Union have amassed large battle fleets. Nor was the Soviet Union directly named in the resolution on Afghanistan despite the presence of 85,000 Soviet troops who invaded that nonaligned nation in December, 1979, and installed the government of Babrak Karmal. The resolution "urgently calls for a political settlement on the basis of the withdrawal of foreign troops" as well as observance of noninterference and nonintervention. This nonaligned movement backed Pakistan, which has demanded the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from its border, and bolstered the stand of India, which has among other nations maintained that the Soviet intervention was caused by foreign backing of Afghan rebel bands. Afghanistan and Vietnam both called the resolution "absolutely unwarranted" and said that it was interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan that had invited the Russians to protect its government from foreign aggressors. Although no aggressor was named, Afghanistan has in the past blamed Pakistan, the United States and China for supplying weapons and training to the Afghan rebel forces, some of whom are based in Pakistan. The unprecedented objections by the two member states broke the code of consensus that the non-aligned movement generally uses to form its position. In this case as well as in regard to Cambodia, a number of members blamed a minority for using a lack of consensus to thwart the will of the majority of the nonaligned states. Cambodia, a nonaligned state not seated at this meeting, posed an equally thorny problem for the movement. Singapore, Malaysia, and Indonesia insisted that the movement call for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia, which Soviet-backed Hanoi invaded in 1979. Hanoi then overthrew the Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot and put Heng Samrin in power. In its resolution, the nonaligned world did not name Vietnam, a fellow nonaligned nation, but called for the withdrawal of "foreign forces." Conference sources said that the Asian nations formed an informal alliance on the Cambodian and Afghan issues with Pakistan to force changes in the original draft declaration presented by India, which did not call for troop withdrawals. There were fears as this meeting started that the nonaligned movement, which Wednesday celebrated the 30th anniversary of its first summit meeting, would lose credibility if it failed to take stances on the three biggest problems facing it — the interventions in Afghanistan and Cambodia and the five-month-old Gulf war between Iran and Iraq, both nonaligned members. It moved Friday to try to get a settlement of that war by trying to set a principles body sides could agree to and naming a committee of foreign ministers to bring an end to the fighting. It appeared unlikely, however, that it would be any more successful than any other international effort. A serious challenge to U.S. policy in the Mideast was the decision to vote against accepting the credentials of the Israeli delegation at the next meetings of the United Nations.

NATO Eager to Inspect MiG Reported in Greece

By Gerard Castoriades International Herald Tribune ATHENS — A Libyan pilot has defected with a Soviet-made MiG-23 fighter to Greece, where other NATO countries' intelligence services are eager to get a close look at it, diplomatic sources in several Western capitals said Friday. Libya is pressing the Athens government to hand back the aircraft promptly or face a cut in Libyan oil exports to Greece, currently running about 10 percent of Greek consumption, the sources said. Greece, caught between its loyalties as a NATO member and its dependence on Libyan oil, has tried to avoid disclosing the identity of the aircraft, which landed Wednesday on the Greek island of Crete. An information Ministry spokesman said Friday that Greece, which granted political asylum to the pilot despite Libyan pressure, intends to return the aircraft. He said that he did not know what kind of aircraft was involved to what he called "a delicate affair." But Western officials have confirmed that the plane — wrongly described in initial press reports as a French-built Mirage — is a MiG-23. The plane was damaged in land-

German War Games

BERLIN (Reuters) — Soviet and East German troops practiced fast river-crossing tactics in a surprise maneuver held in East Germany Thursday, the official daily Neues Deutschland reported Friday. Western military experts in West Berlin said the exercise was staged near the town of Goerlitz. The southeastern city lies on the Neisse River, which forms East Germany's border with Poland. The official report said the troops built a pontoon bridge across a river to test the speed at which men and armored cars could be transferred to the other bank. The experts said that the war games appeared to be meant as a warning to Poland of the continuing possibility of a Soviet bloc intervention.

From Line Halted

VIENNA (Reuters) — Romania Friday halted what it saw as a firm line against strikers in Poland. Breaking a nine-week silence on Poland, the Communist Party daily Scintea quoted Polish leader Stanislaw Kania's speech last Monday, in which he accused Solidarity of fostering "anarchy, counter-revolution and even bloody confrontation with Socialism." A commentary added: "It is only by establishing a climate of work, of high responsibility, of order and discipline that the current state of affairs can be overcome."

Accuses Moscow of Violating 'Code'

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — The United States Thursday accused the Soviet Union of violating a 1972 "code of agreement" intended to curb the activities of the two superpowers in their pursuit of nuclear arms. State Department spokesman William Dyess said that he said Soviet actions in Africa and "most particularly" Moscow's activities in Afghanistan. "We would expect the Soviet Union to live up to the agreement, absolutely," Mr. Dyess said. He commented in response to questions about the Tass report that said the United States violated the agreement by illegally declaring many areas of the world, including the Gulf region, to be in its sphere of interest. "Provocative Exercises" Tass said that the United States sent naval task forces to several such areas, enlarged old military bases and established new ones, and "staged provocative military exercises near the shores of other countries." "We see no point in refuting the specific allegations which we view as 'propagandistic,'" Mr. Dyess said. Asked whether there is a need for further negotiations with the Soviet Union to define the meaning of the agreement, Mr. Dyess said: "You are asking questions we are asking ourselves." The United States intends to maintain a dialogue with the Russians and base its relations with

Meteor 'Spacewatch' NASA Told to Track Asteroids To Safeguard Earth's Future

By Thomas O'Toole Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — In a script that could have been written in Hollywood, the space agency has been told to put a close watch on thousands of asteroids and meteors in the far reaches of the solar system to ease one moves onto a collision course with Earth. Deadly serious, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Advisory Council said a collision with one of the 800 known sizable asteroids in deep space could destroy most of life on Earth, just as a collision is now believed to have wiped out dinosaurs 65 million years ago. The council said the only way to avoid an impending collision would be to detect the possibility far in advance and deflect the approaching body with a hydrogen bomb. "In the 130 million years the dinosaurs roamed the Earth, they failed to develop the technology to avoid their own extinction," the council said in a report to NASA that appeared in the newsletter Science Trends. "Homo sapiens has developed an adequate technology. He can avert any further extinction by asteroid impact. We think he should." Proposing a "Spacewatch" project, the panel urged NASA to attempt to detect all asteroids and meteors larger than 30 to 60 feet in diameter whose paths cross the Earth's orbit and track them for years to come in case they wander onto a collision course. "If a collision appeared imminent, the orbital modification needed to avoid the collision could be determined and a mission deployed to judge the object off its collision path," the advisory body said. "It would only be necessary to avert impact on the collision encounter of the object, which would then recede again into the ... background for thousands of years." To move a meteor or asteroid off its collision path, the council said, a spacecraft carrying a hydrogen bomb could be sent out to the object. It could attach itself to the body, and a radio signal could be sent from Earth to explode the bomb and change the course. The main reason the advisory council proposed Spacewatch is the growing acceptance by scientists of a theory proposed two years ago by Nobel physicist Luis Alvarez that the dinosaurs were wiped out when a giant asteroid collided with Earth. The collision, according to the theory, threw so much dust into the atmosphere that it blocked out the sun for years, destroying the Earth's plant life and the plant-eating animals like the dinosaurs. Mr. Alvarez found a layer of iridium, a metal uncommon to Earth but abundant in space objects, in numerous samples he took in Etruria of the Claystone Layer, formed in the geologic time that separates the Cretaceous and Tertiary periods. More recently, he and his son Walter found the same iridium abundance in the Claystone Layer in eastern Montana, more strongly suggesting it was so widespread that his theory of dinosaur extinction is right. "The likelihood that a similar collision in the future would wipe out the human race," the council said, "led this group to consider 'Project Spacewatch'."

Managua Presses Salvador Rebels to Settle

Man Riding
A — Alarmed by the U.S. economic aid to Nicaragua's Sandinist government, El Salvador's military has begun pressing El Salvador's guerrillas to seek settlement rather than fight in their conflict.

Managua has denied that it allowed its troops to be used for the shipment of arms to the guerrillas in El Salvador. The government recognized that if it did not do so, it would be in violation of the El Salvador constitution.

The administration has "overwhelming evidence" of Nicaraguan support for the guerrillas and has economic aid pending a review of relations with the Sandinist government.

The message has been loud and clear, a Nicaraguan official said. Recognition of the very cost to Nicaragua of an El Salvador.

The failure of the Sandinist offensive last year has led to a change in political negotiations. The Sandinists have agreed that the conflict would intensify if the United States more deeply intervened and eventually the survival of the Nicaraguan government.

The Nicaraguan government has a permanent U.S. economic aid program. The present arrangement for the Nicaraguan government is a two-year contract with the United States.

Nicaragua is facing a crisis because of the foreign exchange. The failure to pay for the Nicaraguan government's foreign debt has led to a crisis.

The Sandinist government has a 60 percent of the economy, and of independent press. These parties use the newspaper La Prensa.

The Reagan administration has also adopted a similar stance in its diplomatic relations with Nicaragua. The administration has also adopted a similar stance in its diplomatic relations with Nicaragua.

Kate Nelligan — Bright and Proud

by Bart Mills

NON — Kate Nelligan is on no list of easy-going actresses in film. On stage and television, from "Plenty" at the National Theatre to "The Normal Heart," she has played so many tortured characters that people who shy away from seeking her out...

Perhaps it's Nelligan's assertive personality? "Nonsense, I'm not assertive, I'm just bright. That in a man is the minimum requirement for walking down the street. In a woman it's called being assertive."

Canadian Kate Nelligan plays Lucy Seward in Frank Langella's Dracula.

"If Kate Nelligan knows so much stage and television, she must be the easy-going actress in film. In some of those parts I've felt like I've been picked off by her. I've had very few chances to stage and turn to the audience and just be lovely."

Nelligan recently took some stick in the English press for declaring her ambition to do as good work in films as she's done in the theater. "You're supposed to take up the mantle. You're supposed to want to play Lady Macbeth. Expressing a passion for cinema sounds perverse to the English."

was bad. In "Private Lives" I was so bad I actually cried on stage. One minute I just sat on the stage, tears rolling down my cheeks, trying to be funny and failing so monumentally.

"My worst failing as a person and as an actor is impatience. I'm impatient with myself and with others. My mind isn't terrific, but it's quick. In my stupidity, I can't get it through my head that others aren't the same way. I'm not as good as I was a year ago, and I'll be better next year."

—an impatient perfectionist.

Nelligan assesses the probability of her becoming an international movie star as "infinitesimal." Yet she was chosen as the leading lady in the 1979 film "Dracula". Among upcoming films, she plays opposite James Coburn in "Mr. Patman" and Donald Sutherland in a World War II thriller, "Eye of the Needle". She continues to appear consistently to the most stimulating BBC drama productions. Still under 30, she has the brightest film future of any British actress.

"It's so agonizing to be had in public. The good actors are terribly brave. The bad ones are stupid. But if you knew you were all right, if you were really arrogant about yourself, you wouldn't need to go on stage at all."

"I'm a perfectionist. Viewed the worst way, it's a terrible thing. Viewed the best way, it's an absolute commitment to get it right. I refuse to opt for a quiet life. But if a man is in a position of power over me, and he's able to screw my work up, and he does, it drives me crazy. If I know something doesn't work, and someone insists on it being done his way, and everyone knows it won't work, and he knows, and it goes on film, and of course it doesn't work, the film isn't subtitled, 'Kate Nelligan knows this is rubbish.'"

Extable Gives Her View Trends in Architecture

by Jean Rafferty

RDEAUX — One might expect to find the distinguished lady — so prominent to a male-oriented profession, somewhat fierce. But meeting Jean Huxtable, one of America's foremost architecture critics, dispels such a notion. A charming lady with that enviable feminine fragility for which men still yearn. She is also sympathetic and far too polite to show dismay at the grasp of what is modernism, "style," or Art Deco slowly slips into

Meanwhile, the constraints have been swept away and there are as many facets of the new movement as colors in a kaleidoscope. "In all this playing with forbidden toys, the thing that stands out most is the rediscovery of the great Western classical traditions. Back to Greece and Rome through the Beaux Arts — this was the most forbidden of all to modernists."

to Bordeaux, where she was a cof jury along with French filmmaker Clement for the First International Architectural Festival, she found time to what is happening in architecture over and abroad, and to explain some difficulties inherent in filmmaking architecture. "The usual film has upshots of framing shots — all very nice in abstract — but giving no sense at all of the architect's aesthetic or the space enclosed. It's two dimensions of what is a three-dimensional art."

Rediscovery does not necessarily mean great buildings. "It's great fun, but it's not producing all that. Some of it's bad and some of it's dreadful, like those fake classical columns that seem to be a necessary gesture."

times architecture as a background to other than as its subject in an art film. "The closer to the mark," Annie Hall found in many art films," she said. "It's a building as experienced by people. See Hollywood films of the '30s — the returns on television give the mantle idea of Art Deco — a beautiful innocence."

Economies oblige — nowadays instead of ripping it down and building something new, architects must make use of what is already there. "There's always a glamorous word — this time it's called contextualism — and it's very much an international movement," Huxtable said.

American Painters Are on the March in West Germany

by David Galloway

COLOGNE — In the 1950s, while New York flexed new-found muscles as capital of the art world, most Europeans were still concerned with repairing the material and psychic damages of World War II. While a few avant-garde galleries made short-hand notations of what was happening across the Atlantic, the debates that roiled through the Cedar Tavern found little echo in Europe. When Peggy Guggenheim's celebrated collection toured the continent in 1948, the response among artists was largely favorable, but the Abstract Expressionist statement was so muted that only for a few could it suggest a new starting point.

for the seal of approval from New York. Cologne's Rudolf Zwirner and Duesseeldorf's Hans Mayer make their own SoHo left tours and draw their own conclusions. Zwirner is devoting almost all of the current season to young American artists — including his latest enthusiastic discovery, sculptor Bruce Robbins. More than a year ago he orchestrated an

Among the inside tips one bears with increasing frequency from German collectors are Terence LaNoue, James Havarid, Fred Bull, Rodney Kipp, Richard Stuart and Susan Pitt. If there is a "pattern" in all this, it is represented by the pattern-painters, who were given the imprimatur of a museum show last year at Aachen's Neue Galerie. But, in fact, there is a Large sheets of paper are washed with color in sweeping, big-brush gestures, and a grid is penciled over the background. Ink is dropped within each of the resulting squares — often, several colors at a time — and forms puddles of jewel-like brilliance.

In West Germany it was not merely the trauma of total war that had shattered a brilliant modernist tradition, but Hitler's demonic persecution of those artists who failed, to his eyes, to uphold National Socialist ideals. The plings that might support a bridge between classical modernism and the contemporary had been ruthlessly torn away. It is not surprising, then, that as the German economy soared in the 1960s, rich German collectors found their way to the New York galleries of Leo Castelli and Sidney Janis.

Johnson's "Garden of Cyrus I": "an amazingly varied pictorial vocabulary."

Huxtable agrees with young French architects that working in France presents special problems. "They complain about the restraints of Paris being Paris — the measured rationale of its elegance weighs them down. They worship Paris and want to kick it at the same time." But she doesn't agree on the contemporary solutions they have so far come up with.

exhibition of "New Image" painters, including Joel Zucker, Miriam Shapiro, George Sugarman and Kim McConnell, all of whom were subsequently featured in solo shows. Cologne is, to fact, a kind of center for the new Americans. Robert Zelenich is at Galerie Holtmann, and Joellenbeck features photographs of Richard Prince, John Giardano and Michael Vesce. Vesce's serious reputation (like that of paper-maker Joel Fisher) has been built largely through a series of European presentations; his stringent but potentially beautiful room environments are sculptural projections of the drawings he began making a decade ago with tape and string. Minimalist and performance artists continue to find support from Bochum's Gallery M. Progress in Duesseeldorf and Munich. Alan Shields, Michele Stewart and narrative-artist Bill Beckley are enthusiastically promoted by Hamburg's Galerie Munroe. The stringent environments of Fred Sandback are presented by Heiner Friedrich in Munich.

remarkable range of styles and media represented in German galleries, and an unprecedented openness to experiment.

Much of this activity is stimulated by the D.A.A.D. (The German Academic Exchange Service), which has enabled hundreds of American artists to live and work for one or two years in Germany. Susan Pitt is ironically erotic "Asparagus Theater," a combination of film, environment and wall constructions, grew in part out of her time to Berlin. The experience not only led to a series of exhibitions, but to an invitation from opera director Nikolaus Lehnhoff to design sets and costumes for the Wiesbaden production of "The Magic Flute". Joel Fisher, too, first received major critical attention during his D.A.A.D. Wanderjahre.

Hillendbrand often suffuses the surface with dustings of metallic powders before the paper is finally bonded to canvas. The total effect is of viewing a work, or a series of works, through veils, and each level reveals a new gesture, a new structure. Despite this complex visual activity, the paintings radiate stillness and tranquility; the triptychs prepared for the Wuppertal show had the opulent shine of ancient icons.

Recent exhibitions by John Hillendbrand and Douglas Johnson underscore the wide range of work on view in Germany. Hillendbrand's lyric but tightly controlled canvases at Wuppertal's Galerie Epikur are the result of the artist's continuing exploration of the abstract mode.

Douglas Johnson, too, includes abstract gesture in his canvases, but only as a kind of grace note, and as one aspect of an amazingly varied pictorial vocabulary. As his current exhibition at Duesseeldorf's Galerie Denise Rene-Hans Mayer makes plain, Johnson's great forte is as a draftsman, and in our time only Hockney competes with the elegant self-assurance of his pencil line. Even in his elaborate paintings — often near-epic in theme — drawing plays a dominant role. It is not buried beneath the fields of color Johnson lays down with such immense painterly care, but superimposed over them. While the oil base is still wet, the artist draws directly onto it with colored pencils, graphite, oil crayons and copy-pencils, so that the drawing fuses with the painted background. Hence, the surface maintains the delicacy and idiosyncrasy of drawing, without its usual fragility.

This is Douglas Johnson's second exhibition at the gallery to the last two years, and it amply demonstrates the discipline, intelligence, and technical virtuosity with which his works continue to grow. His compositions still rely on montage effects, but in the works on canvas, as in those on paper, there has been a simplification of imagery, a concentration of focus. Quotations from literature and the fine arts are still present, as are autobiographical metaphors, but these "picture poems" (as Stephen Spender once called them) have become more distilled, and through that distillation, have acquired yet greater authority. The movement is even clearer in Johnson's new drawings, where relatively few images — a cockatoo, a violin, a sprawling bull terrier, an antique bust — are poised against oval backgrounds in improbable but delicate balance. In their composition, as in their stunning palette of magentas, ivy greens, ochre and delicate blues, these are unashamedly romantic works, stopped short of sentimentality by the commanding authority of the drawing technique. This virtuosity, combined with uncanny insight for his sitters, has made Douglas Johnson one of the most skilled portraitists of his generation, and there is a lengthening waiting list of German clients. It would almost seem as though the artist were determined to rescue the great tradition of portraiture single-handedly from the marginal and rather quack status to which the age of photography has reduced it. ■

U.S.-Algeria Pact Is Expected Soon On Price of Gas

ALGIERS — Algeria and the United States are likely to reach a compromise next week on a price for temporary deliveries of Algerian gas after a 10-month suspension of supplies in a dispute, informed sources said.

The compromise, under which the U.S. is expected to pay much more for the gas, should emerge from a visit here by a U.S. Department of Energy delegation on Tuesday and Wednesday, the sources said.

They said the talks will cover only a temporary restart to deliveries at a provisional price and not a 25-year contract for the sale of large quantities, which both sides want.

Industry experts believe any final settlement could influence world prices of natural gas as other exporters follow Algerian prices. Algeria, the world's third-largest gas producer, has been seeking to tie gas prices to those of oil.

The United States and Algeria were likely to agree on a base price of between $4 and $4.60 per million British thermal units of gas, the sources said.

Algeria was charging $1.94 per million Bu until April 1980, when it suspended deliveries to El Paso Co. The Algerian state energy company, Sonatrach, then sought a price of $6 per million Bu.

The sources said $4 was the last price offered by the U.S. side while $4.60 was proposed by Sonatrach this year for deliveries to Britain.

Record Bonn Sale Fails to Slow Dollar

Silver slipped to $12.75 an ounce from $12.80 on Thursday and $13.275 last Friday.

The mark has been particularly hit by the dollar's buoyancy because of West Germany's economic slowdown and big balance of payments deficit. It has lost more than 20 percent of its value against the dollar in the past six months.

To keep it within its limits in the European Monetary System, whose currencies must float closely together, the Bundesbank is believed to have sold more than a billion dollars last week, but had not been significantly noticed on the market in the last few days.

Even a grim U.S. economic forecast Thursday, predicting worse inflation, growth and unemployment, failed to stop the dollar's rise on European markets.

Dealers said that the markets felt that dangers of inflation would lead Washington to keep U.S. interest rates at the high levels that have made the dollar so attractive to investors recently.

The mark and the Belgian franc sank to their floors against the French franc within the European Monetary System.

Devaluation of Peso in Argentina Triggers Rush to Convert Currency

(Associated Press) BUENOS AIRES — Reflecting a weakening public faith in their government, Argentines have been rushing to banks and currency exchanges to buy U.S. dollars and other foreign currencies since the peso was devalued last week.

The run on foreign currencies started Feb. 3, a day after a 10 percent devaluation of the peso from 2,038 to the dollar to 2,342. The conversion of pesos has drained an estimated $1.35 billion from the Argentine Central Bank.

The bank intervened Wednesday, when $280 million in pesos were traded, the biggest daily run on foreign currency here since 1975.

Bankers cited a lack of public confidence in assurances by President Jorge Videla's military government that the devaluation would be the only major currency adjustment until Aug. 31. A series of minor adjustments of 2 to 3 percent a month is scheduled through August.

The newspaper Clarin reported Thursday that advisers to Gen. Roberto Viola, who is to take office as president next month, were considering a more rapid devaluation for importers and exporters to help Argentine farmers and businessmen dependent on foreign trade. Viola aides quoted by the news agency Noticias Argentinas denied the report.

SPORTSMEN AND GAMESMEN

By John Dizikes. Houghton Mifflin. 350 pp. $15.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt. A collection of colorful portraits, even as a survey of American popular culture, John Dizikes' "Sportsmen and Gamesmen" is just fine. I didn't at all mind reading once again the highly dramatic story of Paul Morphy, the New Orleans chess genius. Even if one finds a little farfetched Dizikes' theory that Morphy's eventual miseries can be compared to the eccentricity of Laura Wingfield in Tennessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie," his refutation of Ernest Jones' Freudian interpretation of Morphy is interesting and provocative.

Nor will I ever really tire of P.T. Barnum, who, Dizikes reminds us, used to sucker his customers into leaving his museum sooner than they'd planned by posting a sign that read "To the Egress." Or the story of how in 1851 John Cox Stevens took aboard the second fastest yacht available to him, the clipper schooner America, and drubbed 17 English opponents in a race for the trophy that came to be known as the America's Cup. Or the epic 41-round bareknuckle boxing match that was fought at Farnborough, England, in 1860, between the American John C. Heenan and the English champion, Tom Sayers. And it's a pleasure to meet some of the less familiar sporting and gaming figures that Dizikes introduces in his volume. There are Col. William Ransom Johnson and Richard Ten Broeck, the two dominant figures in American horse racing during the 19th century. There's Hiram Woodruff, the father of trotting and ome among the most respected and beloved men in America. And there are Henry William Herbert, who under the pen name Frank Forester wrote America's first sports fiction, and William T. Porter, ome of America's first great sports editors.

Not only do these figures give Dizikes the chance to wheel out lively anecdotes about oca-famous, oow-forgotten horse races, boxing matches, sailing tests and other cootests, but they also allow him to explore obscure corners of popular cultural history. Thus we are reminded, in case we'd forgotten or never knew, of the former importance of volunteer fire companies as centers of urban sporting culture. It was in the outrageous dressing-up of volunteer firemen, Dizikes observes, that the American dandy made his appearance. Thus, we are given a picturesque description of the time when the Hudson River was a gathering place for iceboat racers. And thus we learn that "the old gray mare" of the familiar song was actually a mid-19th-century trotter oamed Lady Suffolk that dominated the field for nearly 20 years. The only trouble is that Dizikes, who teaches history at the University of California at Santa Cruz, has a thesis in mind. Superficially, it is unexceptionable — that the development of American sports from the Age of Jackson on has been a "gradual transformation of the aristocratic tradition into a popular one," the aristocratic trad-

N.C. Police Bloodhound Smelled Freedom When Chasing Robber

United Press International. SANFORD, N.C. — A young bloodhound recently acquired by the Police Department highlighted it from the force while tracking an armed robber, authorities said. Police Chief Roo Yarborough said Thursday the 18-month-old dog, named Duke, disappeared Monday night after hacking out of his tracking harness. Duke was taken to a store where an armed robbery had taken place. While the dog and his handler, Detective Marty Cole, were tracking the suspect, the two became entangled in "some heavy undergrowth in a thicket and the dog just backed out of his harness" and kept going, Chief Yarborough said. Officers searched Monday night and all of Tuesday for the dog but failed to find him. Chief Yarborough said his department was still checking the area of the armed robbery in hopes the dog will return. "He wouldn't take up with anyone and probably go one could catch him," he said. "It's just out this dog's nature to take up with anyone. We've only got two people who handle him well. They are the only people he'll come to."

12 F-16s to Take Part In NATO War Game

United Press International. WASHINGTON — Twelve U.S. F-16 jet fighters will be deployed to Norway later this month for a joint NATO mission in the first overseas tactical flight of the newest U.S. fighter aircraft, the Pentagon says. The Air Force planes are to participate in Exercise Blackhawk from Feb. 23 to March 19, Pentagon officials said Thursday.

Fiction Award Set for April

Washington Post Service. WASHINGTON — A new fiction award will be given for the first time April 18 at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville. Called the PEN-Faulkner Award for Fiction, it will be given annually for a work of fiction by a U.S. citizen that is judged best by a small jury of the writer's peers. Its chief distinction is not in the amount of mooney involved ($2,000) but in the identity of the advisory board and the three-person panel of judges that will make the final selection. Judges of 1980 fiction, who have been examining some 230 candidate books since mid-August to select five finalists, are William Gass, Elizabeth Hardwick and Tim O'Brien. They were assisted by suggestions from an advisory panel consisting of Saul Bellow, William Styron, Aliso Lurie, Wallace Stegner and Peter Taylor.
